A REMARKABLE book bearing interesting documents and translations showing the history of Wombwell from as far back as the Domesday Book (1086) is being compiled by former Wombwellian Mr. Derrick Markham, who now lives in London.

Mr. Markham has devoted most of his leisure time in the past year to research into the history of the town, having spent hours at the British Museum and the Public Records Office.

He has obtained photographic copies of documents, and spent hours translating from old English and Latin.

All the photographs and documents have been assembled in a purpose-made book which Mr. Markham is to present to Wombwell Public Library.

In an introduction to the book, Mr. Markham says, "The aim is to try to trace the history of Wombwell from Medieval times onwards with the aid of photographic reproduction and translation of the original documents.

"It is hoped that the information will serve equally well the experienced historian and the student striving to learn more of the history of

"I hope to convey that in any community, seemingly unimportant events took place and are recorded but, where this evidence has been preserved, they can provide an insight into the local way of life of a bygone age."

In his book, Mr. Markham shows that Wombwell has been on the map for centuries and its existence has not escaped the notice of England's rulers, judging by the many forms of taxation levied against its nobler families.

It was essentially a farming area and the most prosperous residents were, of course, the Wombwell family.

"It may take years before the book is completed and I would like to offer my thanks to Wombwell Librarian, Mr. H. Welburn, for his anticipated co-operation in assembling the contents which I shall send from time to time, and to local historian Mr. Joshua Hudson.

Mr. Markham is a former pupil of Kings Road Council School and Wombwell High.

DOMESDAY BOOK, 1066 - 1086.

The Domesday Book, was a Survey of England drawn up by William the Conqueror in 1086, to enable him to learn the true wealth of his Kingdom, presumably for taxation purposes. It states who were the holders of land, what each holding was worth, and what it was worth 20 years earlier under Edward the Confessor. Other notable details given are the numbers of inhabitants, and their status.

According to Joseph Hunter in his History of South Yorkshire, vol. 2, it appears from this Survey that WANBELLA, twenty years earlier was held by 3 Saxons, named Cheteber, Tori and Tor. However, at the time of the Survey Cheteber had been succeeded by Roger de Busli, and Tori by Walter Deincourt, whilst Tor was still in possession of his lands. These were duly granted by the King to the Lords of Skipton.

Cheteber's portion was small; only fourteen bovates, to which was annexed a bovat in Toftes, a place of uncertain appropriation, and two bovates in Melton. The Value was twenty shillings, and the same at the date of the Survey. This had been given to Roger de Busli, who appears to have had, when the Survey was compiled, one carucate in demesne, and three other carucates, occupied by eight villains and four bordars.

Tori had three carucates and a half, with a portion of meadow and woodland; the value, in the time of the Confessor, sixty shillings; but at the time of the Survey only ten shillings and eight pence, the lands being waste. This portion passed to Walter Deincourt.

Tor had two carucates and one bovat lying here and at Melton. His lands were not yet granted out. He himself was still holding them and had a carucate in his own hands, with two carucates in the hands of five villains, three borders, and two sockmen. There was a portion of woodland. The value had been forty shillings, but had fallen to twenty. (Illustrated below.).

Carucate & Bovate, (uncertain measures of arable land).

Villain. (Villager holding land of his Lord, & and bound to supply labour according to custom, he had feudal responsibilities, & rights, also his share of the common fields.)

Bordar. (Occupier of cottage & croft, on loan from his Lord. In return he worked as a labourer on the Lords land & sometimes he received wages. He had no share of the common fields.)

3RD YEAR, HENRY 111, 1218.

This ancient parchment, reproduced opposite, is an extract from the Rolls of the Pleas of the Crown, concerning the Warpentake of Strafford, recording the findings of various cases brought before the Justices at York, in the year 1218.

King John had put his seal to the Magna Carta only three years earlier and, whilst one expects such a document to have survived for over 750 years, it is indeed gratifying to trace one, of similar age, giving extremely interesting, though tragic, information relating to Wombwell and the surrounding district.

1. A stranger was found killed in Houghton wood. William son of Hugh found him. No one is suspected. It is not known who he was.

2. Roger, son of Adam of Bolton upon Dearne, killed Henry de Rockingham and was taken and led to prison at York, and there put in gaol and, escaped through the war. No one else is suspected. Judgment, let him be interrogated and outlawed, because it was attested that Geoffrey de Neville allowed all prisoners to go out of prison on account of the war. It was attested by the Coroners and Sergeants that he had chattels, but he ate them in prison. To judgment touching the Jurors who concealed his chattels

3. Adam, son of Robert of Wentworth, killed Hugh son of William of Wentworth. The said Hugh's brother Robert accused the aforesaid Adam and, by that accusation, Adam was taken and put in prison at York, and went out through the war. Judgement, let him be interrogated and outlawed. To judgment also those that concealed the accusation.

4. Brice of Wath upon dearne, was drowned. Misadventure.

5. Alan the Tailor of Wambewell is outlawed, by the suit of Richard le Westrays, for the death of William, son of Reginald. The said Alan had chattels, one cow, one calf, corn and utensils to the value of nine shillings, of which William de Burgertorp ought now to answer to.

Also, Richard le Westrays, accused Henry, son of Alan the Tailor, and Simon, son of Hugh the Baker, as accessories and sued against Henry, but not against Simon.

Therefore, let Henry be interrogated and also outlawed. To judgment also those who concealed the accusation.

6. To judgment those that concealed the accusation, which Hugh, son of Juliana of Houghton made against Ralf, son of Robert of Billingley, for maiming the left hand of the said Hugh.

The Coroners say that the said Hugh pledged his faith to sue, on account of his poverty, but he has not followed it up because he has not come. Therefore let him be taken.

Poll Tax Return, Richard 2nd, 1379.

In the year 1379, Richard the 2nd was a thirteen years old boy. England was at war with France and faring badly, the need to raise extra money for this war resulted in a Poll Tax being levied; the second in two years.

Every person over the age of fifteen years, was taxed according to rank; the Peasants contribution being 4d, which in most cases represented a full days wage.

Unfortunately this tax did not realise the expected amount and was revised the following year to a shilling per person, regardless of rank. The Lord of the Manor was, expected to subsidise the poor, if need be.

This increase in the Peasants contribution was a major cause in the Peasants revolt of 1381, which was to end in riot and bloodshed throughout the country, and brought about the abolition of the Poll Tax.

The Poll Tax Return for Wombwell was dated at Doncaster, and signed by William of Melton and John Saville, both assessors of this Tax.

Judging by the amounts paid, the two most important men in the village were Hugh de Wombwell, probably occupying Wombwell Hall, and John de Woodhall of Woodhall Manor, probably occupying the site of the later Netherwood Hall.

(Later, during the 16th century, both Manor Houses set the scene for some quite extraordinary and sensational revelations of murder, riots and numerous other unlawful acts, which are fully documented within the following pages of this volume, relating to the Proceedings of the infamous Court of Star Chamber, at Westminster).

From the 193 inhabitants listed in this Poll Tax, it is interesting to learn the nine different Trades practised in the Village, namely,

Tailors	4
Butchers	2
Peddler	1
Baker	1
Draper	1
Wright	1
Smith	1
Locksmith	1
Cobbler	1

This type of information is rarely found in a document of such great age.

In most humble ways showeth and compleyneth unto your Highness, your daily Orator, Thomas Drax, Clerk, that where your said Orator by the space of 20 years past, hath continually been seized of the Manor of Wodhall, in the Parish of Derfeld, in the County of Yorke, in his demean as of fee, and so being seized thereof, being in Gods peace and yours Sovereign Lord, about the 5th day of November last past, one Thomas Drax, Gentleman, and one Thomas Frere, Yoman, accompanied with other riotous persons, to the number of six, unlawfully assembled themselves to gather at Wodall aforesaid, and arrayed in manor of war with swords, bucklers and other weapons invasive, riotously, of their extort power, did forcibly enter into the said Manor, and then and there, wrongfully expelled and clearly put out the Servants of your said Oratour, at that time being at High Mass, in the Parish Church of Derfeld, aforesaid.

Which aforesaid Manor, the said rioters forcibly detained and, kept from your said Oratour as many of his goodes, howsehold stuffe, and other things within the said Manor place, as be worthe £90. Sterling and above. And also, many Evidences concerning the said Manor of your Oratour, which were locked or sealed in box, bag, or chest, being then and there found, the said rioters took and conveyed away; to the great loss, hurt and hinderence of your said Oratour, unless remedy by your most noble Grace, to him be provided in this behalf.

Moreover most Sovereign Lord, about the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord God last past, the said Thomas Drax, Gentleman, and other rioters aforesaid, forcibly and in most riotous manner that can be devised, turned the water that driveth the Mill of your Oratour, called Wodhall Mill, which is yearly worth five marks sterling, out of the right course.

And after, as soon as your said Oratour had knowledge thereof he sent his Servants hither to return the said water into the right course again. At which time the said Thomas Drax, Gentleman, and other riotous persons aforesaid, with like force and in most riotous manner that can be devised, made assault upon the Servants of your said Oratour, and shot arrows at them, and put them in great danger and peril of their lives, to the most perilous example of all other like missordered and riotous persons, if due remedy by your most excellent Highness in speedy manner to your said oratour, be not the sooner provided in this behalf.

In consideration whereof, it may please your Highness of your most abundant Grace, to grant several writtes of Subpena, to be directed unto the said Thomas Drax, Gentleman, and Thomas Frere, and every of them, to appear before your most noble Grace and the Lords of your most honourable Counsell, in the Starr Chamber at Westminster, at a certain day appointed by your Highness, there to answer to the charges, and further to obey all such orders as your most noble Grace and Lords of your most honourable Counsell, hath awarded according to reason. And your said Subjects shall daily pray to God, for your most noble royal estate in having long to endure.

This document dated at Rotherham is similar to the one of 1599 on page 53, it consists of the usual tax of 4s 0d. in the pound on the annual value of land, or 2s. 8d. in the pound on the value of goods. The amounts paid at this time, however, would seem to suggest that this subsidy covers a two year period.

In comparing these two documents, it is perhaps interesting to note that, in the intervening years, the Country was divided by Civil War 1642-1650 and the presence of Oliver Cromwell, as Lord Protector, made many changes in the Land.

One wonders if these factors had any bearing on the disappearance from the Village of the once powerful Drax Family of Woodhall; the loss of one fifth of the Wombwell Family holdings; and the emergence of eight new Landowners.

The information provided here and which is supported by the Hearth Tax Return of page 57 gives evidence from which it is possible to assess the status and prosperity of the local residents.

"PICTURE" of what Wombwell looked like 130 years ago is sketched by Mr. Derrick Markham, formerly of Wombwell, and now of 5 Holmesdale Close, South Norwood, London. Mr. Markham is keenly interested in historical matters, and has spent a lot of time doing research in libraries and museums in order that he might furnish Wombwell with details of its history. Details of his findings, together with photographs, have been submitted to Wombwell Public Library, and are proving of extreme service to students and others who are interested in local history. Mr. Markham tells me that at the Public Record Office in London he has traced a tithe map of Wombwell dated 1838, and on the scale of 12 inches to a mile it is the largest scale map he has been able to find to date. A photo copy of the map has been sent to Wombwell Public Librarian, Mr. H. Welburn.

500 fields

THE map shows what Wombwell was like before the sinking of collieries, the building of factories, and the erection of housing estates. Every house and field is clearly shown and numbered, and the name, occupation and location of each householder is shown. The community comprised farmers, blacksmiths, shoemakers and cotton weavers, and there was only one schoolmaster — Mr. Thomas Dove, who was in charge of a school which still stands adjoining Wombwell Parish Hall. At that time there were over 500 fields in Wombwell, most of which have now been taken over for development. Shown on the map are Chapel Fields (now the Kings Road housing estate), Spring Gardens (George Street), Cock Pit Oak Field (Kingsway), Eight Acres (Stubbs Road), Upper Field (Washington Avenue), First Common Close (Burrows Grove), Cross Hill (Main Street), New Close (Roy Kilner Road), First Windmill (Kitchen Road), Second Windmill (top of Wilson Street) and Little Stubbing (Periwinkle). The site of Wombwell Main Colliery took up fields named Cowley Green, Major Close, Ass Park and Kettle Banks. Names such as this could be useful in the naming of future streets in the town.
